

ALEXANDRIA GAZETTE.

SATURDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 12

THE COST OF A FORBIDDEN MARRIAGE.
A terrible and moving version of "the story old yet ever new" is given by the Italian journal La Perseveranza. We read that a maiden of fifteen years, daughter of parents enjoying high social position in Palermo, eloped the other day with a young medical student named Carlo. After three days of fruitless search the father of Adelaide received the following letter in the handwriting of his child:

DEAR PARENTS—I know and confess that I have done wrong. But I am going to cause you no more pang and then all will be over. You have yourselves been for years witnesses of my sorrow. I loved Carlo, as you have often said, he is too young and without position. In spite of this, his love was pure and holy, as only a first love can be. Very well. We went away together and have lived in each other's society three days of eternal happiness. When you read these lines dear parents, we shall be already dead. Pray for your daughter!

The distracted father and mother at once set out for the address given, determined to parlor their child, but it was too late. They found the girl and her lover in a small hotel of a neighboring town. They had hired a wretched little room, and were found lying near each other suffocated by charcoal gas.

A DISTINGUISHED LADY.—Mrs. Betty Taylor Dandridge, of Winchester, is the guest of Mrs. General Barnes in Washington. She is a daughter of ex-President Taylor and did the honors of the White House while her distinguished father was President. As Miss Betty Taylor she was a reigning favorite in society in Washington and in the south. She married, first, Colonel W. W. Blair, who was a famous officer in the Mexican war and one of the most brilliant and accomplished men in the service. Some years after his death she married Mr. Philip Dandridge of the "The Bower," the family seat of the Dandridges, in Jefferson county, Virginia, a great-nephew of Mrs. General Washington, whose maiden name was Martha Dandridge, and who married Mr. Custis first and Washington afterward. Mrs. Dandridge has been living quietly in the historic old home of Winchester, for nearly thirty years, where she has a typical old Virginia home and is the center of a host of friends. Mrs. Barnes, her hostess, is a daughter of the late General Fannin (formerly colonel of the Second Dragons, U. S. A.), and a life-long friend of Mrs. Dandridge's.
